Sake is made from water, rice and koji [yeast]. The percentage of the rice remaining after it is polished determines whether it is a Daiginjo, Ginjo or Junmai. The less left of the original grain of rice, the more delicate, elegant and aromatic the sake. The finest of this type is the Junmai Daiginjo. Junmai sake is polished less to bring out the best balance of rich full bodied flavours which naturally enhance and lift up the taste of each dish enjoyed with the sake.
