Sake is brewed with water, koji [fermented rice] and polished rice. It is the percentage left of the grain of rice after polishing that determines whether the sake is Daiginjo, Ginjo or Junmai.

If you order sake at a restaurant in Japan, ask for Nihonshu, which simply means "Japanese liquor".

We have selected our wines with care. That is why most of them are sustainable in their own ways: See the explanations below. Ask your host/ hostess if you have further questions.

[S] Sustainable

Sustainable wine, where the farmer does not have an official certification but works locally and thoughtfully with the environment.

[0] Organic wine

Organic wine is free of pesticides and artificial fertilizers and contains fewer sulphites than conventional wine.

[B] Biodynamic

Biodynamic wine is made using only natural remedies in the vineyards; herbal teas, natural fertilizers and nature's own powers. A wine with even fewer sulphites.
